To whom it may concern,

We used Penn Valley Constructors as our General Contractors. They managed the project and hired all of the sub-trades as part of one complete contract.

I would recommend Penn Valley in a heartbeat. They are honest, hardworking, and extremely professional. I have nothing negative to say about Penn Valley at all. We made their life a little bit difficult by going with a spec-build approach; whereas we hired our own architect and engineers, and had them build to our specifications. Their normal model is "design-build" where they handle all of that internally using their own architect and engineers and tailor it to exactly what you want. Despite that, they still took ownership of the whole project and really exceeded my expectations on every front. Word on the street is that I'm not easy to please either, so for me to say that is a pretty strong statement.

After going through the bidding process and getting a feel for the other contractors out there, I count my lucky stars every night that we used Penn Valley.

Their original estimated completion date at the start of the project was November 29th; we have already started to move machines in and we are getting our Certificate of Occupancy tomorrow!
